Re: Revised Draft Recommendation – Administrative Record project

The following draft recommendation is based on a draft report prepared by Leland E. Beck, Esq. entitled Development, Compilation, and Judicial Review of Informal Agency Rulemaking Administrative Records as well as discussions of the Committee on Judicial Review at its March 19, 2013 public meeting. This draft recommendation is intended to facilitate the Committee’s discussion at its April 03, 2013 public meeting, and not to preempt the Committee’s discussion and consideration of any proposed recommendations. In keeping with the Conference’s past practice, a draft preamble has also been included. The aim of the preamble is to explain the problem or issue the Recommendation is designed to address, and the Committee should feel free to revise it as appropriate.

The Administrative Record in Informal Rulemaking

Draft Preamble

1 The administrative record plays an essential role in informing the public of potential agency action and in improving the public’s ability to understand and participate in agency decisionmaking. As well, it can be essential to judicial review of agency decisionmaking under the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), which directs courts to “review the whole record or those parts of it cited by a party” to determine whether challenged agency action is lawful.¹

2 This statutory language was originally understood as referring to formal proceedings. However, the Supreme Court has long interpreted this APA provision as also encompassing the “administrative record” in informal agency proceedings whether reviewable by statute or as final agency actions under 5 U.S.C. § 704. The application to informal proceedings has given rise to uncertainty and experimentation as agencies and courts have worked to implement the administrative record concept—at times inconsistently. As a result, there may well be public confusion about the distinctions between public rulemaking dockets, administrative records, and certified administrative records for judicial review.

The Administrative Conference has therefore commissioned a study of federal agencies’ current practices in the development of public rulemaking dockets, administrative records, and certified administrative records for purposes of judicial review. This recommendation and the supporting Report address these concepts in the limited context of informal agency rulemaking for legislative rules, adopted pursuant to procedures prescribed in 5 U.S.C. § 553. The recommendation and the supporting Report do not address the record for agency decisions made in other contexts, such as in adjudication, formal rulemaking, or guidance documents.

For the purposes of this recommendation, the administrative record, certified administrative record, and public rulemaking docket are defined as follows:

“Administrative Record” means the full record of materials considered by the agency in a rulemaking beginning no later than the date on which the agency publishes an advance notice of proposed rulemaking, if there is one, or the notice of proposed rulemaking.

4 5 U.S.C. § 553(b)-(d).

5 The rulemaking process begins, according to a prior recommendation by the Administrative Conference, “no later than the date on which an agency publishes an advance notice of proposed rulemaking or notice of proposed rulemaking, whichever is earlier.” Administrative Conference of the United States, Recommendation 93-4, Improving the Environment for Agency Rulemaking, 59 Fed. Reg. 4670 (Feb. 1, 1994), correction published, 59 Fed. Reg. 8507 (Feb. 12, 1994).
“Certified Administrative Record” means the informal rulemaking record certified to a court as the record on review of the agency’s regulatory action. The Certified Administrative Record will also include an affidavit, made by a certifying official, attesting to the contents and accuracy of the record being certified. Certified Administrative Records should also include an index itemizing their contents.

The “Public Rulemaking Docket” means the public rulemaking file managed by the agency, regardless of location, such as online at Regulations.gov or an agency website or available for physical review in a docket room. The Public Rulemaking Docket includes all information that the agency has made available for public viewing. The Conference in the ensuing recommendation urges agencies to manage their Public Rulemaking Dockets to achieve maximum disclosure to the public. An agency best practice is to include in the Public Rulemaking Docket information considered even after the termination of public comment periods.

The Conference recognizes that agencies engage in informal rulemaking with differing frequencies, resources, and technologies. Many agencies are in a period of transition, as they move from paper to electronic recordkeeping. Attention to the design of information technology resources that is mindful of the principles and best practices set forth below can aid agencies in administrative recordkeeping and facilitate more effective judicial review. Similarly, this guidance can aid agency personnel as they compile Administrative Records and increase public understanding of agency decisionmaking.

This recommendation builds upon important earlier Administrative Conference work in the areas of rulemaking, recordkeeping, and technological developments in managing records.

8 The Administrative Conference has generally recommended that agency policies that affect the public should be articulated and made known to the public to the greatest extent feasible. Administrative Conference of the United States, Recommendation 71-3, Articulation of Agency Policies, 38 Fed. Reg. 19,788 (July 23, 1973).
Administrative Conference Recommendation 74-4, Preenforcement Judicial Review of Rules of General Applicability, first identified the administrative materials that should be before a court in evaluating, on preenforcement review, the factual basis for agency rules of general applicability.\(^9\) The recommendation was directed, in part, at the judicial development of a lexicon of administrative law terms, including “record” on review of informal agency rulemakings.\(^10\) In Recommendation 93-4, Improving the Environment for Agency Rulemaking, the Administrative Conference advised agencies to establish and manage rulemaking files “so maximum disclosure to the public is achieved during the comment period and so that a usable and reliable file is available for purposes of judicial review.”\(^11\) A number of Administrative Conference recommendations also have examined the use of technology in acquiring, releasing, and managing agency records.\(^12\) Most recently, the Conference examined legal considerations associated with the use of digital technologies in the development and implementation of informal rulemakings.\(^13\)

The recommendation synthesizes and updates the Conference’s prior recommendations in these areas based on a thorough review of present agency practice. It also defines and clarifies key concepts. The recommendation is grounded in applied empirical research, documented in the Report and supported by a survey questionnaire on agency recordkeeping.

\(^{13}\) Recommendation 2011-1, supra.
The Conference has identified and recommends best practices for all agencies in the areas of record compilation, preservation, and certification.

Compilation and preparation of the Certified Administrative Record is properly within the province of the agency and this process should be accorded a presumption of regularity by the reviewing court. Completion or supplementation of the Certified Administrative Record may be appropriate where a strong showing has been made to overcome the presumption of regularity in compilation. For example, courts have permitted limited discovery on the basis of a “strong showing of bad faith or improper behavior” on the part of the agency decisionmaker. Courts may also investigate allegations that the agency omitted information from the Certified Administrative Record that it should have included.

Completion or supplementation of the Certified Administrative Record may be appropriate in other circumstances as well. In previous recommendations the Conference has recognized that the reviewing court should not invariably be confined to the record on review in evaluating the factual basis of a generally applicable rule on preenforcement review. The Conference has also acknowledged that the administrative record “can usually be supplemented, if necessary, by means other than an evidentiary trial in a district court” on direct review of rules by courts of appeals. However, the specific endorsement of completion or supplementation of the Certified Administrative Record in this recommendation is limited to situations where the presumption of administrative regularity has been overcome and where the Certified Administrative Record is capable of sufficient rehabilitation to permit adequate judicial review.

[DRAFT] RECOMMENDATION

1. Administrative Record in Informal Rulemaking. In the absence of a specific statutory requirement to the contrary, the agency Administrative Record should contain all materials considered by the agency during the informal rulemaking, including:

   (a) notices pertaining to the rulemaking;

   (b) comments and other documents submitted to the agency related to the rulemaking;

   (c) factual materials not included in the foregoing;

   (d) transcripts of oral presentations made in the course of a rulemaking;

   (e) reports or recommendations of any relevant advisory committees;

   (f) other materials required by statute, executive order, or agency rule to be considered or to be made public in connection with the rulemaking; and

   (g) any other materials considered by the agency as pertinent to the rule.

2. Public Rulemaking Docket. Agencies should manage their Public Rulemaking Dockets to achieve maximum public disclosure. Insofar as feasible, but subject to legal limitations on disclosure, the Public Rulemaking Docket should include all materials in the Administrative Record.

3. Certified Administrative Record. The Certified Administrative Record provided to the court on judicial review of informal rulemaking should contain all of the materials in the Administrative Record as set forth in Recommendation 1, except: materials for which disclosure is prohibited or that are otherwise protected from disclosure by law and which are not presented under seal; and materials that the agency has determined are subject to withholding on the basis of legal privilege in the forum for review, and that it sees fit to withhold. However, the reviewing court should not invariably be confined to the foregoing materials in evaluating the factual basis for the rule. The record on review may—consistent with the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 706, and as appropriate under the rules of the reviewing court—also consist of those parts of the Certified Administrative Record cited by a party.

Compiling and Indexing the Administrative Record

4. Agencies should begin compiling Administrative Records no later than the date on which an agency publishes an advance notice of proposed rulemaking, if there is one, or a notice of proposed rulemaking.

5. Agencies should maximize opportunities to index Administrative Records for informal rulemaking on an ongoing basis, at an appropriate level of detail, and consistent with privilege and Freedom of Information Act indexing practices.

6. Agencies should designate a custodian or custodians for administrative recordkeeping, either on a rulemaking by rulemaking basis or generally. Agencies should inform agency personnel of the custodian(s) and direct them to deposit materials considered during the rulemaking with the custodian(s). The custodian(s) should document the record compilation process.
Preserving Administrative Records

7. The National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) should consider amending its agency guidance to specifically indicate the legal value of records relating to the promulgation of legislative rules, particularly Certified Administrative Records.

8. Agencies using electronic records management systems to manage rulemaking records, such as the Federal Document Management System or agency specific systems, should work with NARA to ensure the adequacy of such systems for archival purposes and the transferability of permanent records to the National Archives. Agencies should consider whether revision of their records schedules is appropriate in light of developments in electronic records management.

Certifying Administrative Records

9. Agencies should develop procedures for designating appropriate individuals, who may or may not be record custodians, to certify Certified Administrative Records to the court in case of judicial review of agency action. Agency certifications should include an index of content. Agency certifications should briefly describe exclusions of Administrative Record material from the Certified Administrative Record, if any.

Agency Guidance on Informal Rulemaking Administrative Records

10. Agencies that engage in informal rulemaking should issue guidance to aid personnel in implementing the above best practices. Agencies should make their guidance on informal rulemaking administrative recordkeeping available to the public and to the Department of Justice, if the Department represents them in litigation. The level of detail and contents of such guidance will naturally vary based on factors such as: the size of typical agency rulemaking records; institutional experience, or the lack thereof, with record compilation and informal rulemaking litigation; the need for consistency across agency components in the development and maintenance of rulemaking records; and agency resources. However, agencies should ensure that guidance addresses at least the following:
(a) essential components of the Public Rulemaking Docket, the Administrative Record, and the Certified Administrative Record;

(b) appropriate exclusions from the Administrative Record, including guidance on whether and when to exclude files such as personal notes or draft documents;

(c) timing of Administrative Record compilation and indexing practices;

(d) management and segregation of sensitive or protected materials, e.g., copyrighted, classified, protected personal, or confidential business information;

(e) management and segregation of privileged materials, e.g., attorney work product, or pre-decisional deliberative materials;

(f) preservation of Administrative Records; and

(g) certification of the record on review, including the process for identifying the appropriate certifying official.

If relevant, agency guidance should include:

(h) capabilities and limitations of recordkeeping tools and technologies; and

(i) policies and procedures for the protection of sensitive information submitted by the public during the process of rulemaking or otherwise contained in the Administrative Record.

Judicial Review

11. A reviewing court should afford the Certified Administrative Record a presumption of regularity.

11.12. In appropriate circumstances, a reviewing court should permit or require completion or supplementation of the record on review. Supplementation or completion may be appropriate when the presumption of regularity has been rebutted, such as in cases where there is a strong showing that an agency has acted improperly or in bad faith or there are credible allegations that the Certified Administrative Record tendered by an agency is incomplete.
