

Special Procedural Rules for Social Security Litigation in District Court

Committee on Judicial Review

Proposed Recommendation for Council | November 17, 2016

1 The Administrative Conference recommends that the Judicial Conference of the United 2 States develop special procedural rules for social security litigation commenced in federal court
3 involving claims for benefits arising under Titles II and XVI of the Social Security Act.¹ The Rules 4 Enabling Act delegates authority to the United States Supreme Court (acting initially through the 5 Judicial Conference) to prescribe procedural rules for the lower federal courts.² The Act does not 6 require that procedural rules be trans-substantive (that is, be the same for all types of cases), 7 although the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (Federal Rules) have generally been so drafted. Rule
8 81 of the Federal Rules excepts certain specialized proceedings from the Rules’ general procedural 9 governing scheme.³ In the case of social security litigation in the federal courts, several factors 10 warrant an additional set of exceptions. These factors include the extraordinary volume of social 11 security litigation, the Federal Rules’ failure to account for numerous procedural issues that arise 12 due to the appellate nature of the litigation, and the costs imposed on parties by the various local 13 rules fashioned to fill those procedural gaps.⁴

14 The Social Security Administration (SSA) administers the Social Security Disability
15 Insurance program and the Supplemental Security Income program, two of the largest disability 16 programs in the United States. An individual who fails to obtain disability benefits under either of 17 these programs, after proceeding through SSA’s extensive administrative adjudication system, 18 may appeal the agency’s decision to a federal district court.⁵ In reviewing SSA’s decision, the 19 district court’s inquiry is typically based on the administrative record developed by the agency.

20 District courts face exceptional challenges in social security litigation. Although 21 institutionally oriented towards resolving cases in which they serve as the initial adjudicators, the 22 federal district courts act as appellate tribunals in their review of disability decisions. That fact 23 alone does not make these cases unique; appeals of agency actions generally go to district courts
24 unless a statute expressly provides for direct review of an agency’s actions by a court of appeals.⁶
25 However, social security appeals comprise approximately seven percent of district courts’ dockets, 26 generating substantially more litigation for district courts than any other type of appeal from a 27 federal administrative agency. The high volume of social security cases in federal court is in no 28 small part a result of the enormous magnitude of the social security disability program. The 29 program, which is administered nationally, annually receives millions of applications for benefits.
30 The magnitude of this judicial caseload suggests that a specialized approach in this area could 31 bring about economies of scale that probably could not be achieved in other subject areas.

32 The Federal Rules were designed for cases litigated in the first instance, not for those 33 reviewing, on an appellate basis, agency adjudicative decisions. Consequently, the Federal Rules 34 fail to account for a variety of procedural issues that arise when a disability case is appealed to 35 district court. For example, the Rules require the parties to file a complaint and an answer. Because 36 a social security case is in substance an appellate proceeding, the case could more sensibly be 37 initiated through a simple document akin to a notice of appeal or a petition for review. Moreover, 38 although 42 U.S.C. § 405(g) provides that the certified record should be filed as “part of” the 39 government’s answer, there is no functional need at that stage for the government to file anything

40 more than the record. In addition, the lack of congruence between the structure of the Rules and 41 the nature of the proceeding has led to uncertainty about the type of motions that litigants should 42 file in order to get their cases resolved on the merits. In some districts, for instance, the agency 43 files the certified transcript of administrative proceedings instead of an answer, whereas other 44 districts require the agency to file an answer. In still other districts, claimants must file motions for 45 summary judgment to have their case adjudicated on the merits,⁷ whereas such motions are 46 considered “not appropriate” in others.⁸

47 Social security disability litigation is not the only type of specialized litigation district 48 courts regularly review in an appellate capacity. District courts entertain an equivalent number of 49 habeas corpus petitions,⁹ as well as numerous appeals from bankruptcy courts. But habeas and 50 bankruptcy appeals are governed by specially crafted, national rules that address those cases’ 51 specific issues.¹⁰ No particularized set of rules, however, accounts for the procedural gaps left by 52 the Federal Rules in social security appeals.

53 When specialized litigation with unique procedural needs lacks a tailored set of national 54 procedural rules for its governance, districts and even individual judges have an incentive to craft
55 their own. This is precisely what has happened with social security litigation. The Federal Rules 56 do exempt disability cases from the initial disclosure requirements of Rule 26, and limit electronic 57 access of nonparties to filings in social security cases,¹¹ but, otherwise, they include no specialized 58 procedures. As a result, numerous local rules, district-wide orders, and individual case 59 management orders, addressing a multitude of issues at every stage in a social security case, have 60 proliferated. Whether the agency must answer a complaint, what sort of merits briefs the parties 61 are required to file, whether oral arguments are held, and the answers to a host of other questions

⁸ See, e.g., S.D. Iowa Local R. 56(i).

⁹ During the twelve months that ended on September 30, 2014, the district courts received 19,185 “general” habeas corpus petitions and 19,146 social security appeals. 62 differ considerably from district to district and, sometimes, judge to judge. Such local variations
63 have not burgeoned in other subject areas in which district courts serve as appellate tribunals; this 64 fact reflects the district courts' own recognition that social security cases pose distinctive 65 challenges.

66 Many of the local rules and orders fashioned to fill the procedural gaps left by the Federal 67 Rules generate inefficiencies and impose costs on claimants and SSA. For example, simultaneous 68 briefing—the practice in some districts that requires both parties to file cross motions for resolution 69 of the merits and to respond to each other's briefs in simultaneously filed responses—effectively 70 doubles the number of briefs the parties must file. Some judges employ a related practice whereby 71 the agency is required to file the opening brief.¹² Because social security complaints are generally 72 form complaints containing little specificity, courts that employ this practice (known as 73 “affirmative briefing”) essentially reverse the positions of the parties, leaving to the agency the 74 task of defining the issues on appeal. The questionable nature of some of these local variations 75 may be attributable in part to the fact that they can be imposed without observance of procedures
76 that would assure sufficient deliberation and opportunities for public feedback. Proposed 77 amendments to the Federal Rules must go through several steps, each of which requires public 78 input. So-called “general orders” and judge-specific orders, on the other hand, can be issued by a 79 district or individual judge with very little process.

80 The disability program is a national program that is intended to be administered in a 81 uniform fashion, yet procedural localism raises the possibility that like cases will not be treated 82 alike. Burdensome procedures adopted by some districts or judges, such as simultaneous briefing 83 schedules, can increase delays and litigation costs for some claimants, while leaving other similarly 84 situated claimants free from bearing those costs. Further, many of the attorneys who litigate social 85 security cases—agency lawyers and claimants' representatives alike—maintain regional or even 86 national practices. Localism, however, makes it difficult for those lawyers to economize their 87 resources by, for instance, forcing them to refashion even successful arguments in order to fit 88 several different courts' unique page-limits or formatting requirements.

¹² See, e.g., Briefing Schedule, Barnes v. Colvin, Civ. No 14-482 (S.D. Tex. Sept. 3, 2014), at 1-2; Standing Order
Gov. Dev. of Soc. Sec. Cases Assigned to Judge Conrad (W.D. Va. Jan. 1, 2005).

89 Procedural variation can thus impose a substantial burden on SSA as it attempts to 90 administer a national program and can result in arbitrary delays and uneven costs for disability
91 claimants appealing benefit denials. SSA and claimants would benefit from a set of uniform rules
92 that recognize the appellate nature of disability cases. Indeed, several districts already treat 93 disability cases as appeals.¹³ Many of these districts provide, for example, for the use of merits
94 briefs instead of motions or for the filing of the certified administrative record in lieu of an answer.

95 The Supreme Court has recognized that the exercise of rulemaking power to craft
96 specialized procedural rules for particular areas of litigation can be appropriate under the Rules
97 Enabling Act.¹⁴ Yet, in recommending the creation of special procedural rules for social security 98 disability and related litigation, the Administrative Conference is cognizant that the Judicial 99 Conference has in the past been hesitant about amending the Federal Rules to incorporate 100 provisions pertaining to particular substantive areas of the law. That hesitation has been driven, at 101 least in part, by reluctance to recommend changes that would give rise to the appearance, or even 102 the reality, of using the Federal Rules to advance substantive ends, such as heightened pleading
103 standards that would disfavor litigants in particular subject areas. The proposals offered herein
104 have very different purposes. Indeed, the Administrative Conference believes that rules 105 promulgated pursuant to this recommendation should not favor one class of litigants over another 106 or otherwise bear on substantive rights. Instead, this recommendation endorses the adoption of 107 rules that would promote efficiency and uniformity in the procedural management of social 108 security disability and related litigation, to the benefit of both claimants and the agency.¹⁵ Such a 109 commitment to neutrality would also serve to dampen any apprehensions that the proposed rules 110 would violate the Rules Enabling Act’s proscription of rules that would “abridge, enlarge, or ¹⁵ This recommendation is the latest in a line of Conference recommendations focused on improving the procedures used in social security cases. See, e.g., Recommendation 78-2, Procedures for Determining Social Security Disability Claims, 43 Fed. Reg. 27,508 (June 26, 1978); Recommendation 87-7, A New Role for the Social Security Appeals Council, 52 Fed. Reg. 49,143 (Dec. 30, 1987); Recommendation 90-4, Social Security Disability Program Appeals Process: Supplementary Recommendation, 55 Fed. Reg. 34,213 (June 8, 1990).

111 modify any substantive right.”¹⁶ Rules consistent with these criteria could potentially address a 112 variety of topics, including setting appropriate deadlines for filing petitions for attorneys’ fees, or 113 establishing judicial extension practices, or perhaps authorizing the use of telephone, 114 videoconference, or other telecommunication technologies. In developing such rules, the Judicial 115 Conference may wish to consult existing appellate procedural schemes, such as the Federal Rules 116 of Appellate Procedure and the Rules of Practice and Procedure of the United States Court of 117 Appeals for Veterans Claims.

118 The Administrative Conference believes that a special set of procedural rules could bring 119 much needed uniformity to social security disability and related litigation. In routine cases, page 120 limits, deadlines, briefing schedules, and other procedural requirements should be uniform to 121 ensure effective procedural management. At the same time, such rules should not apply to cases 122 that do not fit within the ordinary mold, such as class action disability lawsuits, in which, for 123 example, the usual page limits and deadlines would be too confining. More generally, the new 124 rules should be drafted to displace the Federal Rules only to the extent that the distinctive nature
125 of social security litigation justifies such separate treatment.¹⁷ In this way, the drafters can avoid 126 the promulgation of a special procedural regime that sacrifices flexibility and efficiency for 127 uniformity in certain cases.

128 The research that served as the foundation for this report focused on social security 129 disability litigation commenced under 42 U.S.C. § 405(g). Section 405(g) also authorizes district 130 court review of SSA old age and survivors benefits decisions, as well as other actions related to 131 benefits. Because such non-disability appeals do not differ procedurally from disability cases in 132 any meaningful way,¹⁸ it is the Conference’s belief that this recommendation should apply to all 133 non-class action social security cases commenced in federal court arising under Titles II and XVI
134 of the Social Security Act.

¹⁶ 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b).

¹⁸ Further, they only constitute about four percent of total social security cases appealed to district courts annually. See Table C-2A, U.S. District Courts–Civil Cases Commenced, by Nature of the Suit, During the 12-Month Periods Ending September 30, 2009 Through 2014, at 4.

RECOMMENDATION

- 135 1. The Judicial Conference, in consultation with Congress as appropriate, should develop for the 136 Supreme Court's consideration a uniform set of procedural rules for social security cases 137 commenced in federal court that involve claims for benefits arising under Titles II and XVI of 138 the Social Security Act. Class action lawsuits should be excluded from the scope of such rules.
- 139 2. Examples of rules that should be promulgated include:
- 140 a. a rule providing that a claimant's complaint filed under 42 U.S.C. § 405(g) be 141 substantially equivalent to a notice of appeal;
- 142 b. a rule requiring the agency to file a certified copy of the administrative record as the 143 main component of its answer;
- 144 c. a rule or rules requiring the claimant to file an opening merits brief to which the agency 145 would respond, and providing for the filing of appropriate subsequent responses 146 consistent with 42 U.S.C. § 405(g) and the appellate nature of the proceedings;
- 147 d. a rule or rules setting deadlines and page limits as appropriate; and
- 148 e. other rules that may promote efficiency and uniformity in social security disability and 149 related litigation, without favoring one class of litigants over another or impacting 150 substantive rights.
