H,

In my read of the recent language and I have some concerns. How does this language protect the small inventor and keep big companies from steamrolling them? I have worked for a small invention company and sometimes small inventions have big claims that would not necessarily fit into a small claim court. Injunctions could be a tool used here to help protect the little guy. On the face of the patent it says, "Grants to the person(s) having title to this patent the right to exclude others from making, using, offering for sale, or selling the invention throughout the United States..." These rights should be protected.

Thanks for your time and consideration.
