Administrative Conference:

I've founded two US manufacturing corporations, VanSteel and Pro Motorcar Products, based on my new patented products. These created good jobs and US exports.

I no longer intend to spend years of my time and assets to create new products and new businesses knowing that the changes to the US Patent system allow larger entities to force an endless number of costly validity reviews with the results likely that my patent rights are taken away.

It is ironic that individuals started companies like Microsoft, Apple and Amazon that have benefited our country but now their management has too much power using PTAB to take new products from small entities.

For the good of the country, it is time to give independent inventors and small entities the same level of representation in determining policy as the large players and attorneys have had.

A first step would be to create a Small Entity Court.

Thank you for considering this, and feel free to contact me at any time.
