

Small Claims Patent Court Comments

Mike Kramer [REDACTED]

Mon 08/29/2022 18:02

To: Kazia Nowacki knowacki@acus.gov

Hi, I am an inventor having spent the last 20 years perfecting my invention.

Current laws give advantage to big corporate interests making it impossible for inventors like myself to protect our intellectual properties from litigation from corporations using the current legal system to have our granted patents nullified in order to circumvent paying royalties.

Given that a patent is a teaching document whose purpose is to teach someone skilled in the art how to replicate the invention, the small inventor is in a no~win situation because they have already disclosed how to replicate the invention without any recourse to recoup their expenses or royalties from the many years of toil required to perfect the invention to the point where the invention can have a patent issued.

Special protections need to be codified in law to protect the rights of small inventors who in many cases invested their life savings to become a patented inventor!

Thanks!

Mike